Mr. Hamlin will make personal observations while in New York of the operation of the Hess cartage system, to see for himself whether Mr. Hess has carried out the reforms which have been promised, and which importers have been strenuously demanding for many months. The complaints have not ceased, and the Department is getting weary Mr. Hamlin would like to know whether or not they are well founded.

(Special to The Evening World)
WASHINGTON, March 6.—Secretary WASHINGTON, March 6.—Secretary Carlisle is looking for an angel. The particular niche into which he desires to fit his is the Supervising Architect's office. Besides being an architect the angel must possess patience enough to accept conditions as he finds them until the office can be reformed by law. Secretary Carlisle is heartly in favor of a reconstruction of the office on the lines of the McKaig bill, which failed to pass the late Congress, though he has been represented as opposed to it. In the meanwhile the office is doing rather more work and doing it better than usual despite the fact there is no Supervising Architect to manage matters.

The following letter was read to the Assembly: heavily on Kelly's head, receiving several right-hand swings on the jaw in return.

Kelly sought to force matters in the third, but Connell fought back for the body. The hottest kind of infighting marked the round, Connell being the weaker at its close. He railled in the fourth, though, and Kelly ran, away after he had taken hard smashes on the face and ribs. Kelly came back and closed the Jerseyman's left eye, which had been damaged. Connell rushed at him like a mad bull and pounded him hard in his corner, but was too weak to finish his man.

Connell fought desperately in the fifth, landing on face and ribs. His gameness was wonderful and the round was his. In the sixth Kelly played for Connell's disabled optic, but the game lad weakened the Staten Islander with heavy swings.
